impact.

"That's our big theme now, how can you make your mark on the school, how can you make your mark on the world," said Carignan.

This upcoming Thursday, students will share their experiences with their Canadian counterparts in Colleen Rose's class in Nipigon-Red Rock District High School in Red Rock, Ontario. Her students made a human sculpture peace sign and an ice dot sculpture for their Dot Day projects.

Meyer's other classes came up with ideas for the Dot Day project.

"These ranged from creating a dot by taking photos of students and editing them on their iPad to create a dot out of students' faces to creating a large dot out of glow sticks," she said. "Each class was very original in their plans for International Dot Day."

Students were proud of their projects.

"We decided we wanted to work with little kids," said

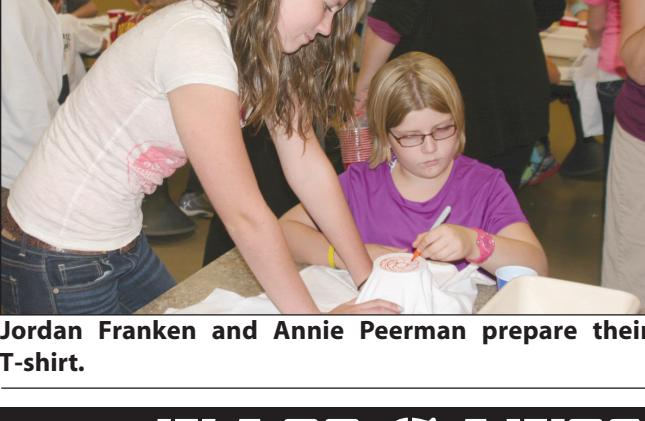

Skylin Heidemann and Shaelie Akers went with a traditional tie dye look for their T-shirts.

Right, Brady Benning and Jordan Gomes enhance the color with rubbing alcohol.

Jordan Franken and Annie Peerman prepare their t-shirt.

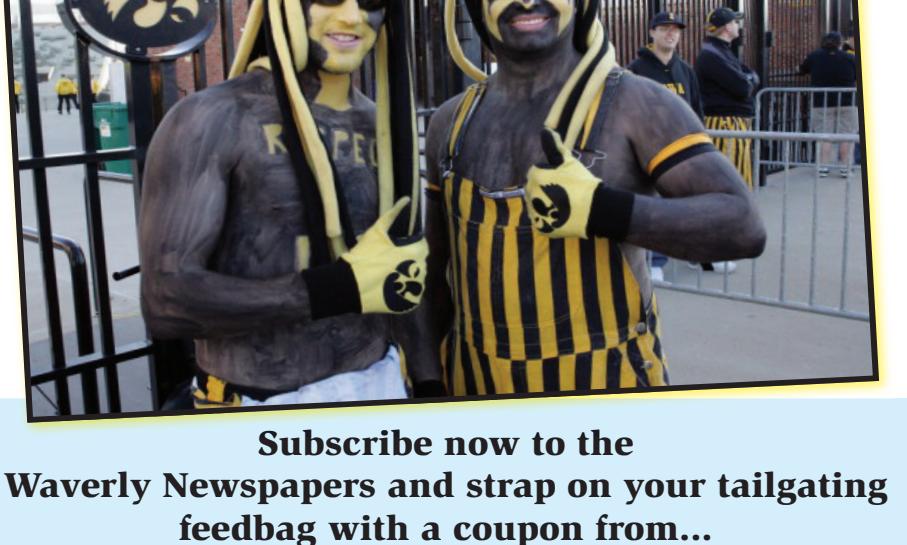

Sophie Figura and Bradly Andersen put finishing touches on a T-shirt.

Shanai Divyansh and Cade Carpenter finish their design.
